Viscerally exciting but ultimately meaningless because of the lack of characterization and context. With Josh Hartnett, Sam Shepard, Ewan McGregor and Tom Sizemore. (R.) Cary: Crossroads. THE ONE ★ — Jet Li. (PG-13.) Raleigh: Blue Ridge.

ORANGE COUNTY ★★½ — Quirky and more ambitious than a lot of teen comedies. Shawn (Colin Hanks) devotes every waking moment to trying to get into Stanford and escape the confines of his semiwealthy, highly dysfunctional family. (PG-13.) Cary: Crossroads. Chapel Hill: Plaza. Durham: Willowdale, Wynnson. Garner: Towne Square, Morrisville: Park Place. Raleigh: Carmike 15, Grande, Mission Valley.

Annie Proulx's Pulitzer Prize-winning novel about an emotionally shattered sad sack (Kevin Spacey) who moves to his family's ancestral home in Newfoundland and begins to rebuild his life. A handsome production, but Jacobs' script is scattershot and shallow. (R.) Cary: Crossroads. Chapel Hill: Chelsea.

SNOW DOGS Zero stars — In this pandering, cartoonish comedy, Cuba Gooding Jr. plays a Miami dentist who travels to Alaska to check on a team of sled dogs he has inherited and clashes with a crusty local (James Coburn). (PG.) Cary: Crossroads. Chapel Hill: Lumina, Timberlyne. Durham: Carmike 7, Wynnson. Garner: Towne Square. Raleigh: Grande.

SPY GAME ★★½ — Robert Redford and Brad Pitt. (R.) Cary: Crossroads. Raleigh: Blue Ridge, Raleighwood.

Nike decides to stop manufacturing products

"From now on, we'll just focus on making ads," says CEO Phil Knight, Nike founder and CEO. "By discontinuing our entire product line, we will be in position to ensure that Nike remains the world leader in the field of incredibly cool television commercials well into the 21st century."

Nearly 95 percent of Nike's 6,800 employees were laid off following Monday's announcement, with only those in the company's advertising and promotions divisions keeping their jobs. Knight said he will offer the fired employees' combined salary of $210 million to basketball superstar and Reebok pitchman Shaquille O'Neal, the most prominent athlete not currently under contract with Nike. If necessary, Knight said, the shoe company will terminate long-distance runner Joan Benoit-Samuels' $30,000 annual contract and add it to the O'Neal offer.

"Basically, we feel that there are a lot more important things in this life than selling shoes," Knight said. "When a Nike commercial ends, and that Nike swoosh dramatically appears on your TV screen, it means a lot more than 'Just Buy It.' It means 'Live Your Dreams.' It means, 'Make It Happen, Children Of The Earth... Find The Courage To Go Out And Make The Most Out Of Life.' I don't want that beautiful message of hope and inspiration tarnished by crass commercialism." Nike's next project will be a 17-minute, $200 million spot scheduled to air during halftime of Super QUESTIONABLE Bowl XXXII in January 1998. The commercial, which is being touted as "the most killer commercial of all time" by Nike officials, will advertise the imaginary new Air Gravitats basketball shoe. The spot, set in deep outer space, will feature Warner Bros. cartoon favorite Wile E. Coyote, supermodel Naomi Campbell, and box-office mega-star Bruce Willis, as well as "kitschy" cameos by 1960s television icons Adam "Batman" West and Barbara "I Dream Of Jeannie" Eden. The digital effects and hyper-realistic alien space-battle sequences in the new ad are said to represent major breakthroughs in special-effects magic, requiring the construction of a Nike supercomputer and over 35 kilotons of pyrotechnic explosives.

In the ad's climactic finale, Knight said, the nation of Iceland will actually be destroyed. "In the past, with so much of our budget going toward things like research and development, and employee salaries, a project like this would not have been feasible," Knight said. "Now, from a financial standpoint, our ability to inspire the world's athletes through a barrage of arresting visual images and high-volume rock music is almost limitless."

Nike spokespersons are confident the new ad will be the finest the company has ever produced. "Let's just say that, if the Air Gravitats actually existed, everybody in the world would want a pair after seeing this commercial," Nike director of corporate communications Dwight Haselrig said. "If we were actually selling the Air Gravitats, it would go down as the best-marketed and best-loved athletic shoe in history."

QUESTIONABLE, BUT BRIEF

Parents' password cracked on first try

REDONDO BEACH, CA — Nick Berrigan, 14, successfully hacked into his parents' AOL account on the first try Tuesday, correctly guessing that "Digby" was their password. "They actually used the dog's name," said Berrigan, deactivating the parental controls on his AOL account. "They don't give me much credit, do they?" Experts advise parents to secure Internet accounts with any password besides the name of a family pet.
